Welcome one year of cease-fire

August 31st will mark the first anniversary of the IRA cease-fire which lifted the peace process onto a new level and brought hope to Irish people everywhere that an end to the long-running conflict was in sight.

The British Government had promised a courageous and generous response to an IRA cease-fire. Instead they have had to be dragged every inch of the way, delaying for months over words like "clarification", "permanent" and "decommissioning". Likewise they refused to follow the lead of the Irish Government in early releases of political prisoners and have withdrawn only 800 of their 30,000 strong military presence. The Irish people can play a real part in advancing the peace process. Our continual public support for it is crucial to prevent backsliding by politicians and deadlock from the British Government.
